Some people have periods that last only three days; others bleed for six or seven days. But the menorrhage that lasts over a week could be alarming. "A hyperactive or hypoactive thyroid and polycystic ovary syndrome (PCOS) is a common problem caused by hormones that can cause irregular and longer periods". Dr. Ross told Health. "Hormone-disrupting drugs such as thyroid drugs, steroids and antipsychotics are also often responsible." According to MedlinePlus, uterine fibroids and polyps are two types of benign growth that can also be blamed for abnormal vaginal bleeding. Age is another thing that comes into play. Because people in their late 30s and 40s affect the perimenopause the time just before the actual menopause, hormonal changes can cause shorter or longer periods. For example, if there are high levels of estrogen in the body, increased bleeding may occur. A September 2020 article on Lung Circulation stated: "As fat mass increases in obesity, the expression of aromatase and, as a result, estrogen levels are also elevated" which means that extreme weight gain may have the potential to make the flow heavier. "If you notice that your period is frequent, less than 21 days apart, or more than seven days for more than three months, I suggest you contact your doctor to discuss why this might happen", Dr. Ross said. The appearance of spots or slight bleeding at any time of the month beyond menstruation can be quite alarming. If it happens occasionally and is rather light, like a few drops of It's probably nothing to worry about and it could just be the result of fluctuating hormone levels. But if it is a bit heavy, causing dipping into a swab or swab every day, or occurs month after month, tell your health care provider.
